GitHub for Digital Professionals

Version Control, Issue Tracking, and Documentation

Paul Jones

Local Wisdom

Introduction

We used to use a number of disparate services to provide source control, issue tracking, and documentation for deliverables.

beanstalk

Doxygen

But now, one service provides all three functionalities.

We build software.

GitHub lets us build better.

What is GitHub?

GitHub is a code repository hosting service, which offers all the features of `git` as well as adding its own features, such as:

- Issue-tracking
- Wikis
- Project web pages

What is `git`?

noun

`git` is a source control system with support for distributed and non-linear workflows.

“Source Control”

$ git add --all
$ git commit -m “added awesome”
$ git push

“Source Control”

$ git pull

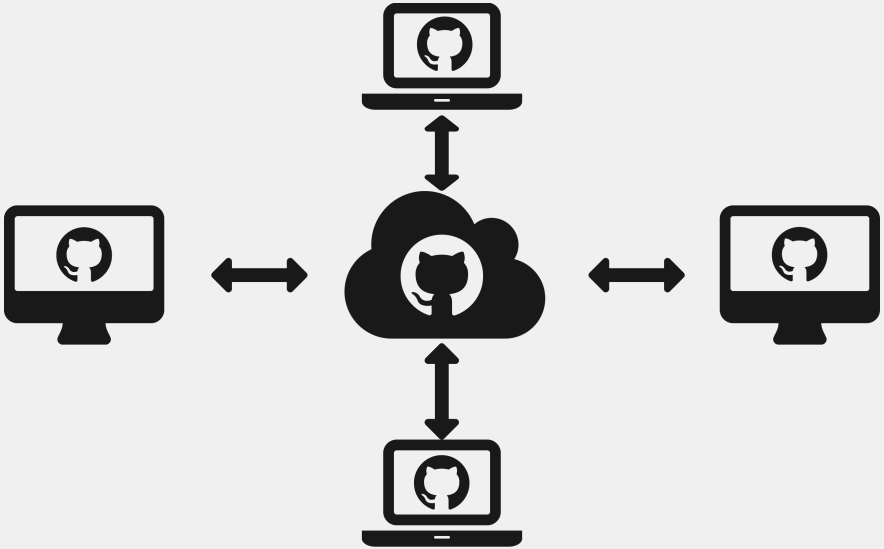
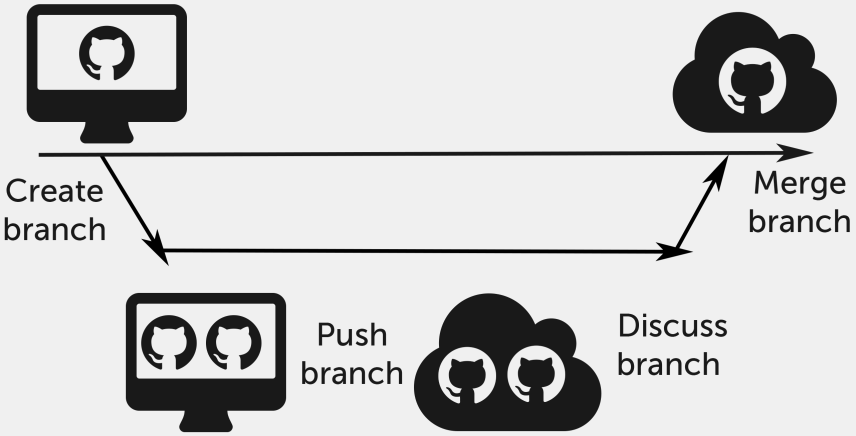
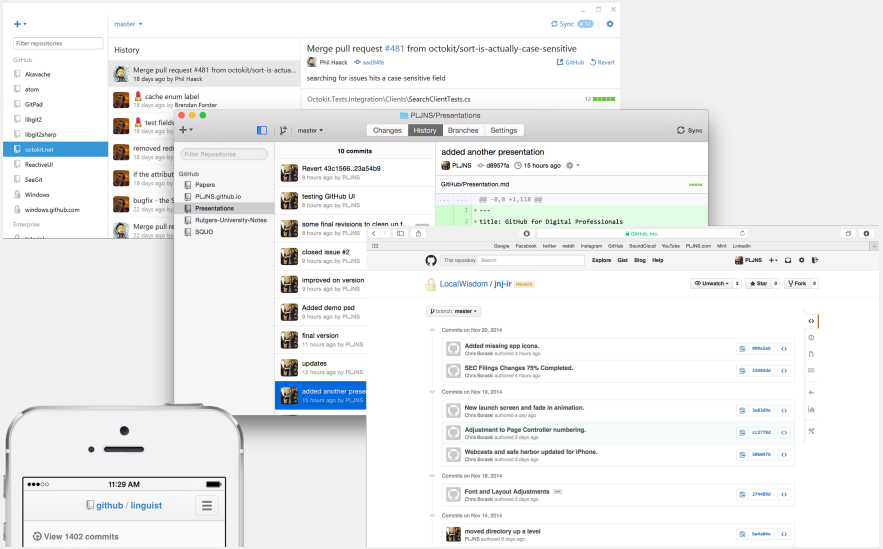
“Distributed”



“Non-Linear”



All Platforms



Issue Tracking

Welcome to the jnj-ir wiki!
Wikis provide a place in your repository to lay out the roadmap of your project, show the current status, and document software better, together.
Create the first page

Pause for demo.

Overview

- GitHub Wikis are a place in your repository where we can share long-form content about our projects, such as:
  - how to use it,
  - how it's been designed, and
  - planned features.
- Wikis can be edited directly on GitHub, or you can work with a text editor offline and simply push your changes.
- You can:
  - Add images
  - Create sidebars
  - Create footgers
  - Edit locally
  - View history

Conclusion

GitHub allows us to build better software, together.

Advanced Topics

- GitHub lets you publish HTML straight to the web from any branch named "`gh_pages`".
- GitHub supports mentioning people with @, linking issues using #, using emoji, and adding images.
- If you want to close issue #35, put closes #35 somewhere in your commit message.
- Markdown, the markup language used for GitHub documentation, is useful for much more than GitHub: this presentation was written in Markdown!

After this presentation, I'll send an internal all email with a link where you can use your Local Wisdom email to create a GitHub profile to get you started.

Thank you!
